1    Introduction

The State of Louisiana, as a leader in providing consumer/customer information to its constituents, and as evidenced through its planned implementation of an eGovernment web site has established a goal for all departments to endeavor to attain. As the Office of Community Services (OCS) increases its use of Internet technology and reaps the benefits of streamlined communications, and advanced data collection as well as increases in productivity and customer service, its security risks inevitably increase. Information security involves more than just technological defensive measures.  A sound and comprehensive information security strategy will also involve all encompassing policies and procedures developed to support the specific needs of the organization.  Many of these security measures are already in place within OCS, however, the Internet introduces new information security issues that must be addressed for the LAKIDS application to ensure the protection of its valuable information resources.

Simply turning on the Secure Sockets Layer (SSL) on your web server is not enough. There are organizational security measures such as access to server rooms and limiting the number of open ports on a web server that OCS must account for. To better identify the necessary measures, AMS analyzed the proposed LAKIDS n-tier infrastructure to provide effective internal and external security controls to meet or exceed any legal requirements and official regulations by using the following "security building blocks" (requirement LA49):

- ➤ Identification & Authentication – Determining whether individuals or systems are who they say they are.  This is the most important element of security.
  - o Implementation Recommendation: Application Server software

- ➤ Authorization – Determining what access privileges have been granted to a user, group, application or process and enforcing these privileges.
  - o Implementation Recommendation: Security Schema and RDBMS grants on tables and views

- ➤ Integrity – Provide assurance of the correctness of the content of the information.
  - o Implementation Recommendation: RDBMS constraints

- ➤ Confidentiality – Protect information from unauthorized eavesdropping.
  - o Implementation Recommendation: Data only hardware-based 128 bit encryption on transmission to client – (SSL)

- ➤ Non-repudiation – The ability by both parties in a transaction to prove to a third party that the sender sent the message and the receiver received the message.
  - o Implementation Recommendation: Implement X.509 Digital Certificates configured in a static encryption key infrastructure insuring the transaction and provide the best performance.

➢ Auditing – Creating a chronological record of the user, the systems, application and network activities of all transactions.
  o Implementation Recommendation: RDBMS triggers will be used where defined by business requirement to log changes made to LAKIDS data (requirement LA286).

Each of the six building blocks of security and recommended implementation strategies (requirement LA331) is discussed in more detail in the Software Architecture Specification (SAS) Sections 5.5 and 6. The following graphic depicts the location of these security components within the architecture defined by the SAS.

For the purposes of the Security Plan, the concentration will be on the application itself, which relies most on the authorization block. Authorization is the ability to control whether a user is granted access to application data and functions. Once authentication has determined who the individual is, the system must determine what the individual is authorized to do within the application (requirement LA123) (e.g., updating case information, updating provider information creating or maintaining a budget, etc.).

At the core of protecting private information about child abuse, adoption and other family-centered situations, it is important that the department aggressively train its staff in data privacy and security concerns. To supplement professional behavior, the security plan defines data access rules to be used by the application during the users interaction with the system including data input, processing and dissemination (requirement LA183). See Section 4.0 for the table containing the data access rules. These rules define what activities a user is authorized to perform in accordance with confidentiality and security policies defined by OCS that support a client's right to privacy as well as a client's right to receive services (requirement LA27). In addition, the rules secure LAKIDS information when accessed by persons external to OCS.

For the application to perform authorization, an application system component schema must be designed to support the storage of access capabilities to the application components that will display data and allow functions to be executed. Once the application components (e.g., screens, data entry areas, buttons, etc.) to be controlled have been identified, the components may be grouped by logical roles that different communities of application users can perform. The components in conjunction with the type of actions the user can perform (i.e., Create, Read, Update, and Delete) on the particular component are called an Access Control List (ACL). In LAKIDS, Access Control Lists are called Profile Resources. LAKIDS defines two levels of security hierarchy to associate the Profile Resources into logical, business functions and organizational groups (levels). The highest-level is directly associated with an individual user, identified as a Party within LAKIDS. This level is displayed to a supervisory user when requesting security for another user in the system through the staff management security tab. This enables the person to access the application processing for broad organizational business functions (i.e., Field Staff, State Office Financial Staff, Adoption Petition Staff, etc.). In LAKIDS, these are called User Groups. The organizational grouping/level is comprised of a set of secondary level security groups in the hierarchy that control access to discrete business functions (i.e., Intake, Investigation, Planning, Assessment, etc.). These are maintained by the security administrator. The secondary levels known as Security Profiles are tied directly to the Profile Resources.

1.1   Security Schema

This section documents the security schema mechanism designed for LAKIDS. Below is a graphical representation the application security component schema depicting the tiers and levels described in Section 1.0 Introduction and later in Section 1.1. The schema and its objects, attributes and methods are documented in the LAKIDS High Level Object Model.

COMMON EVENTS: Security

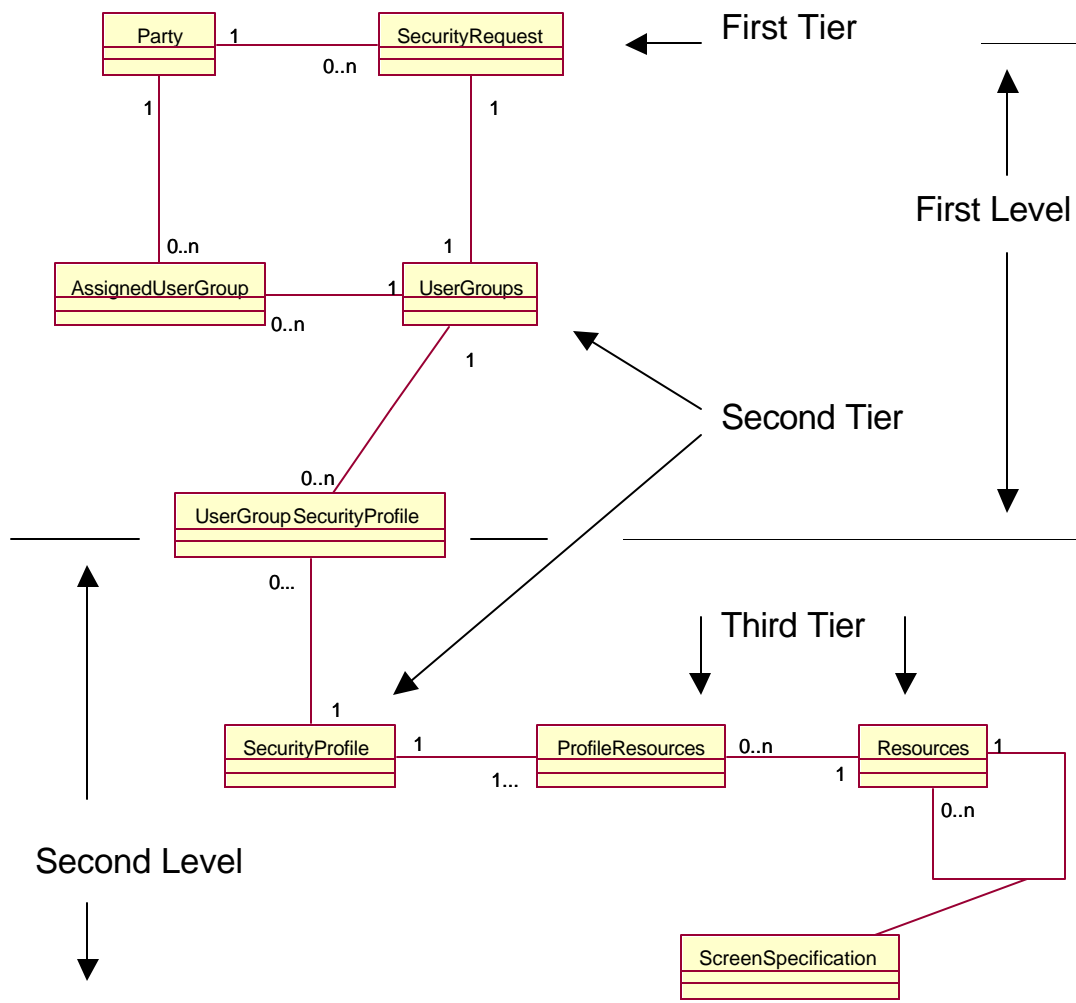

The schema shows the capability for the LAKIDS application to make Security Requests for access by a particular Party and when approved the User Group is then added to Party's list of Assigned User Groups. The User Groups are composed of many Security Profiles; the Security Profiles may have many associations to many User Groups in the schema allowing Security Profiles to be shared amongst one than one User Group, if necessary. This is accomplished by the User Group Security Profile object. The Security Profiles reference a list of Profile Resources, each containing an ACL for each application component or Resource. Resources are grouped by Screen Specifications for display only purposes on the security maintenance screens in the LAKIDS application. Screens and their associated methods/attributes are also considered Resources in the security schema and have corresponding Profile Resources to control access to them. The Resources are associated to a particular screen through the Screen Specification.

As the picture implies, the schema has three tiers. The top tier represents an individual user known in the application architecture as a Party. The middle tier contains two logical groupings. The first grouping is designed to represent the OCS organizational structure and the second grouping an application business function. The bottom tier represents the base of the application authorization security controlling the actual access rights to individual resources.

1. First Tier – User
2. Second Tier – Logical Organizational and Business Functional Groupings
3. Third Tier – System Resource Access Rights

Later in this document, we will examine how the base components/resources specifically relate to the upper tiers as well as how this tier can be implemented with differing software architecture methods.

1.2   Controlling Data Access from Outside the Security Schema

The LAKIDS system is required to support controlled access by additional interface mechanisms such as reporting tools and other "inter" or "intra" departmental systems. To ensure the integrity of LAKIDS data, the system will rely on the combination of relational database security mechanisms that either Grant or Revoke access to tables and views as well as the nightly creation of a Query Only database. The Query Only database will support access by report writers and any interface that does not require real-time access to LAKIDS data. Both the Query Only and Operational databases will be protected by the relational security mechanisms. In particular, direct table access will not be allowed except to LAKIDS connection pool user ids. Other users or interfaces will only be able to access LAKIDS data via database table views that are capable of ensuring the implementation of LAKIDS business rules (requirement LA52). The diagram in Section 1.0 Figure 1.0-1 graphically depicts these communication pathways.

1.3   Invoking Security Authorization

Each time a screen is requested by the user, the security schema will be checked to determine the access rights granted in the Profile Resources associated with the User Group and Security Profile for the authenticated user. If two or more Profile Resources exist for a given screen, the access granted will be the more permissive rights. In other words, of two Profiles Resources allocated to a user if one Profile Resource prescribes No Access and another Profile Resource prescribes Read Access then the user will be granted Read Access. Below is the hierarchy of access rights from lowest to highest:

➢ No Access

- ➢ Execute Access
- ➢ Read Access
- ➢ Create Access
- ➢ Delete Access
- ➢ Update or Full Access

Since the access rights are a hierarchy, the access rights highest in the list are granted the access rights found lower in the list. For example, Update or Full Access grants all capabilities Update, Delete, Create, Read, Execute whereas Read Access grants only Read and Execute rights.

As part of requesting access to a screen, the LAKIDS application will also describe the type of access the screen should allow. The type of access requested is determined by the location within LAKIDS desktop where the user initiates the screen display request. From the following locations, Full Access will be requested.

- ➢ All Desktop Lists (i.e., Cases, Intakes, Ticklers, Investigations, Providers)
- ➢ All Search Screens (allowing input to search fields; not to actually maintain data)
- ➢ All Maintain Menu items
- ➢ Data requested from Financial and Staff Search Output Lists

All Create Menu items will request Create Access. All other functions including all other Search Output List functions will request Read Access. Once the schema has determined the available access rights, the available access rights will be compared to the requested access and then to any applicable security access business rules (i.e., assignment, approval, staff maintenance rules, restricted cases) (requirement LA180). The process will progress in the following steps:

- ➢ If the requested access is lower than the allowed access rights, then only the requested access rights will be applied.
- ➢ If the requested access rights are higher than the allowed access rights, then only the allowed access rights will be applied.
- ➢ If the requested access and the allowed access are both Full Access, then the application will check for a valid/open Assignment (see WM02 – Assignments for more detail on Assignment processing) or Final Approval (see CM03 – Approval for more detail on Approval processing).
  - o If a Final Approval exists, Read Access is granted (e.g., protecting narrative text – requirement 180).
  - o If the logged in Staff member is not allowed to update the requested Staff member information, Read Access is granted.
  - o If an Assignment exists, Full Access is granted.
  - o If the Assignment does not exist, Read Access is granted.
  - o Otherwise, Full Access is granted.

Note: When defining data access rules ensure that non-assignment and non-approval based application functions are properly protected from the default full access granted by the application.

2    Security Terminology

For the LAKIDS application, terminology has been defined to associate application functions with the security mechanisms. The information required to place values into the security entities that make up the application system component schema in the LAKIDS application was supplied by the LAKIDS State Project Team. They articulated the organizational and function roles that all state staff, both internal and external to OCS, as well as providers and the public could engage in when as users they interact with the LAKIDS application.

2.1    User Groups

User Groups represent a list of Security Profiles that will be associated with individual users. The User Groups correspond to the organizational structures internal to OCS as well as other external types of user communities (i.e., providers, general public, etc.).

2.2    Security Profiles

Security Profiles represent a list of Profile Resources that will be associated with a User Group. The Security Profiles correspond to functional roles individual users in an organization have in interacting with the application. Functional roles combine a number of screens interactions to allow a user to complete a particular business function (i.e., Intake, Investigation, Foster Care Case Management).

2.3    Profile Resources and Resources

Profile Resources represent the access rights to the LAKIDS application Resources. Profile Resources represent the Access Control Lists found in tools used to implement application authorization security.  LAKIDS access rights are defined as Create, Read, Update, Delete, Execute, and No Access. Resources represent the application's system components. The application's system components are screens, fields/attributes and functions/methods (i.e., buttons). A user can request access to Resources while interacting with the application to perform some or all of an individual business function.

3    Supporting Implementation Strategies

The security schema can be implemented as part of an overall enterprise security approach or as an application specific implementation. Lightweight Directory Access Protocol (LDAP) and Directory Services are two examples of common enterprise approaches. Both have drawbacks because they cannot implement the complete schema and do not make sense to implement unless part of an enterprise directive due to the extra maintenance required to continually update their contents. In addition, performance can be impeded since the services are generally located on separate physical devices. Application Server and Custom Application Software based security offer the most flexibility, operate in the environment where they are aware of the application components and objects, do not impede performance and use the designed LAKIDS components as defined by the development tool. Custom Application Software has slightly more maintenance because it does not directly read the business objects but does contain the most flexibility. The Application Server understands the business objects, attributes and methods and has the ability to group these into a roles-based security model that represents the underlying basis of the LAKIDS security authorization.

3.1    LDAP and Directory Services

LDAP is a fast-growing technology for accessing common directory information. LDAP has been embraced and implemented in most network-oriented middleware. As an open, vendor-neutral standard, LDAP provides an extendable architecture for centralized storage and management of information that needs to be available for today's distributed systems and services. LDAP provides a mechanism for managing a list of named resources in a hierarchical manner (see Figure 3.1-1).   Below is a representational LDAP hierarchy that was defined to identify individuals and equipment with their organizations within their companies within the country where the company is located. "Root" is always defined for LDAP hierarchies. It acts as the collection holder from which all the named resources emanate. The LDAP example below could be used to implement access control to both an organization's equipment and its people's schedule or could be used to schedule equipment for use by the defined individuals. The following example could also be illustrated for OCS as root <> department <> state office <> region <> parish <> site <> supervisor <> worker.

The LDAP protocol is a significant improvement over the original directory services X.500 protocol because it has been designed to operate with the TCP/IP protocol. The original X.500 directory access protocol contained overheads for support of other transport protocols and session/presentation methods and tools to support searching the directory and cross-linking directory entries. LAKIDS is planned to be a multi-server environment for load balancing and redundancy so directory services cannot be executed within the same physical server with the application server. The refore, the overheads associated with X.500 protocol do not assist the LAKIDS application in achieving its goal to reduce response times to the lowest achievable.

The present LDAP implementations vary depending on the vendor. LDAP implementations, when used in conjunction with security schemas, tend to be flat and do not provide a hierarchy of named resources. This limits the capability to place the entire LAKIDS schema into an LDAP repository. For the LDAP implementations that support hierarchical naming, greater response time is consumed. In a multi-server environment, the LDAP server needs to be placed in its own physical server to eliminate the requirement to maintain or replicate the repository. Because LDAP requests must then be transmitted to the LDAP server and since LDAP requests occur more frequently than requests for data from the database, the requests have significantly more impact on application server processing.

3.2 Application Server

Application Server software offers authorization mechanisms that are uniquely tied to the objects in their domain. Objects form the basis for the LAKIDS schema. Named resources are created as they are identified to the server. Hierarchical structures can be created to group the named resources. This enables the application server to completely mimic the LAKIDS schema. Maintaining the security for modified and newly created objects is driven by software promotion ensuring synchronization between the security schema and the application software. Response time is not effected detrimentally because the security services are provided from within the server. AMS recommends this implementation mechanism. Examples of these features can be found in the Microsoft® Windows 2000 Internet Information Server (IIS) and Active Directory™ Global Catalog and IBM® WebSphere Application Server™ Advanced Edition V4.0 J2EE V1.2 Complaint Roles Based Security.

3.3 Custom Application Software

While this mechanism certainly offers the greatest flexibility, the application design has not defined a requirement that cannot be met with available technologies. AMS sees no reason to consider the maintenance and costly development of this option when commercial off the shelf software (see Section 3.2) can provide the functionality needed by the State.

4    Hierarchy and Template

The table below contains the template for the security schema. The hierarchy represented by the table is only one level unlike the two levels defined in the security schema. AMS recommends that the Security Profile Name be duplicated into the User Groups and initially a one-to-one association be created between Security Profiles and User Groups. This will enable the application to better support the implications of organizational change bound to occur over time.

The template below was developed by LAKIDS Project Staff from a list of screens for each topic area and the Actor List developed during System Requirements. The actors roles represented a narrow view of LAKIDS application functions. The LAKIDS State Project Staff reduced the roles to thirteen organizational/functional roles. These are:

6    Revision History

As updates are made to the Security Plan, a record is inserted into the table to track changes.  This table provides a revision history for the document.

The "Description of Updates" column should contain the page number of the change and the reason for the change.  The name of the person who made the change should be entered into the "Updated By" column.

| Approval Date | Approved By | Description of Updates | Updated By |
